

Aunt Annie's here!

Gpa's password

–Oh, that must be Jake!

–Hi Gpa!

Heather told me you need some help setting up the password on your phone.

–Yes, yes, Hi Jake, come in. And thanks for coming over.

–Where's your phone, Gpa?

–It's here in the living room.

–OK, let's have a look. Have you already got a password?

–Yes, I do.

–What is it?

–“Password”.

–Yes, you know, your password. It's like a code. You're the only one who knows it. You have to enter it here.

–My password is “Password”, with an uppercase ‘P’.

–Your password is “Password”?

–Yes, because it's easy to remember.

–But that's terrible.

Aunt Annie's here!

–Why?

–That’s the first password hackers try when they want to hack your phone or computer.

–OK. How about this: “Gpa”? You’re the only one who calls me Gpa.

–No, that’s too short. It should have at least seven or eight characters.

–OK, then how about this: 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8?

–No, that’s even worse. That’s always the second password hackers try.

–Hmm, here’s an idea! Let’s trick them with 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 9.

Gosh, I hope I can remember that!

Jake rolls his eyes.

–Gpa, maybe Touch ID is better for you.

–What’s that?

Jake rolls his eyes again and takes a deep breath.

–Do you know what, Gpa? I think that’s enough for today.

Ciao for now.
